Canadian Federation of Independent Business (CFIB) Study: Small business views on the Canada Post strike Preliminary Data

Figure 1

Have the current rotating Canada Post strikes negatively affected your business to date?

Yes, 66% No, 34%

If yes, describe your experience (we received 36 pages of comments; these are a sample):

- In Northern communities we do not have access to as many different options when it comes to sending and receiving mail. We have been delayed in receiving mail (documents and payments) from clients and have had to make alternative arrangements for making payments on account and sending information to clients.
- We don't send product out via Canada Post; however we do count on their services for the delivery of invoices as well as incoming payments to us. Some people may say 'just email your invoices'. We have customers who either do not use email at all, or are not good at checking their incoming messages. This being the case our invoices go unnoticed, and the end result we aren't being paid. We have bills to pay as well as committed banking obligations. THIS POSTAL STRIKE IS CRIPPLING US! It is interfering with the regular flow of business and is definitely adding to the STRESS levels.
- We are a trucking company. We are obligated, as are most, to pay our fuel bill to Imperial Oil daily. The fuel check was picked up but has not yet been delivered. Thus rendering our fuel account 'overdue' and preventing us from purchasing fuel. Essentially shut the company down as a trucking company without fuel is not very productive. I have not yet calculated the downtime costs as I am afraid to.
- We cannot send our packages confidently via Canada Post so we have to use courier which costs more and doesn't service all locations we need. Also, we are not receiving payments on time and other mail. Extremely inconvenient and disruptive. They should not be allowed to strike as this is almost an essential service.
- This has delayed some payments from customers and has forced us to go to commercial banking so we can pay our suppliers by EFT. This will have a permanent effect on the post office as when they return to work, we will not be returning to mailing our payments.
- > We have not received payments on services for the past 2 weeks for 40% of our clients, whom are elderly and uncomfortable with electronic payments. This has impacted our Accounts Receivables by approx. $80K
- Many contract renewals were mailed to customers at the end of October. Many customers have been calling to advise they have not received a new contract. Some went with other companies because they thought we were not interested. We have had to call every customer to make sure they received the contract.
