

CHAMBER DOCUMENTS

DEFINITION AND PURPOSE

For each sitting of the Senate, three documents are published in both official languages: the Order Paper and Notice Paper (the Senate's official agenda), the Journals of the Senate (the Senate's official record), and the Debates of the Senate (the edited transcript of proceedings). With the exception of the Order Paper and Notice Paper, these documents are no longer printed in paper form, but are available electronically on the Internet (at sencanada.ca). This note explains what information each of these documents contains and how they interact with one another.

ORDER PAPER AND NOTICE PAPER

The Order Paper and Notice Paper is the official agenda of the Senate. It sets out all items of business before the Senate, including items for future sittings. It is prepared in advance of each sitting based on decisions taken at the previous sitting and notices given by senators.¹ The document outlines the Order of Business – the structure of a typical sitting day – and identifies specific items – bills, reports, motions or inquiries – that may be debated during the sitting.

BEFORE THE ORDERS OF THE DAY

Each sitting is divided into two parts. The first one includes Senators' Statements, Routine Proceedings, Question Period and Delayed Answers. The Senate does not deal with the items listed on the Order Paper and Notice Paper until it has completed the first part of the sitting. Routine Proceedings is particularly important for setting the Senate's agenda. It is a period during which senators can give notice of motions or inquiries for future sittings, provide reports or other documents for the Senate's information or for future consideration, and introduce bills. Government notices of motions and notices of inquiries are automatically included in the Orders of the Day,² while notices for non-government motions and inquiries are included on the Notice Paper. With certain exceptions, such as an amendment, a question of privilege or an emergency debate, the Senate cannot consider an item that does not appear on the Order Paper and Notice

Paper unless leave is granted.³ Leave is a request to vary from the provisions of the Rules of the Senate and usual practice, and must be agreed to by all senators present without objection.

ORDERS OF THE DAY AND NOTICE PAPER

Once the Senate has concluded Question Period and received any delayed answers to oral questions or answers to written questions, it moves to the second main part of the sitting: the items listed on the Order Paper and Notice Paper. Government Business – including items on notice – is called before Other Business (non-government items). Within each of these large groupings, the more advanced stages of the legislative process (such as third reading) are called before the earlier stages of the process (committee reports on bills or second reading).

Bills appear on the Order Paper in ascending numerical order within each category, with Senate government bills preceding Commons government bills in the relevant categories. Committee reports on bills are listed according to bill number while committee reports on matters not related to bills are assigned a chronological number according to the order in which they were put on the Orders of the Day. Separate numerical lists are kept for Government Business and for Other Business.

Motions and inquiries are also assigned a chronological number based on the order in which notice was given, with separate sequences of numbers for Government Business and Other Business. To facilitate tracking, they retain this number for the rest of the session. In most cases, the assigned number appears on the Order Paper and Notice Paper and determines the order in which these items are listed and called.⁴

A notice for a non-government motion or inquiry remains on the Notice Paper, which is found after the Orders of the Day, until the sponsor moves the adoption of the motion or launches the inquiry. If the debate on the motion or inquiry is adjourned, the item is moved to the Orders of the Day for the next sitting of the Senate, appearing under the appropriate category and in ascending numerical order. Once the Senate has dealt with a motion or concludes debate on an inquiry, the item is removed from the Order Paper and Notice Paper.

Every sitting day, each item on the Order Paper and the Notice Paper of that day is called and is eligible for debate, unless the sitting ends before the item is reached. There is therefore generally an opportunity to debate each item at each sitting. Government Business stays on the Order Paper until it has been disposed of. However, when it comes to items of non-government business, a counter shows the number of sittings during which they have been called and stood (i.e. neither debated nor adjourned by motion). If an item is called for 15 sittings and stood each time, it is dropped from the Order Paper and Notice Paper if no other action is taken. However, if the item is debated or adjourned by motion at any time, the counter drops back to zero and the count begins again.⁵ In addition, the name of the senator who moved the adjournment or in whose name the debate was adjourned is usually indicated in the case of items of non-government business.⁶ This indication does not, however, prevent other senators from speaking on the items or prevent the Senate from deciding on them.⁷

WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Questions from senators seeking statistical data or other information not readily available, or questions to which a written response is requested, may be submitted to the Clerk of the Senate in writing for inclusion in the Order Paper and Notice Paper. Such questions appear at the end of the document and are published in the Order Paper and Notice Paper of the sitting day that follows their receipt, as well as at the start of each subsequent sitting week until answered by the government or until the end of the session.⁸ There is no obligation or deadline to respond to the question. Appendix A of this document contains a sample letter to the Clerk of the Senate to submit a written question.

THE SCROLL – AN ADMINISTRATIVE VERSION OF THE ORDER PAPER AND NOTICE PAPER

The Scroll is an administrative document based on the Order Paper and Notice Paper. It is printed on large-format paper, with space for notes and abbreviated text for long items of business. An annotated version of the Scroll is also prepared for the Speaker's use during the sitting.

In addition, a summarized version of anticipated business, known as the Scroll Notes, is circulated by email to all senators prior to each sitting. These notes are not authoritative and are subject to change at any time.

JOURNALS OF THE SENATE

The Journals of the Senate are the official record of Senate proceedings. The Journals note all proceedings, decisions and votes taken in the Senate in the course of a sitting. Presented reports⁹ appear in their entirety in the Journals, as do the lists of senators who were present in the chamber and who were in attendance to business pursuant to the Senators Attendance Policy.¹⁰ Rulings and statements by the Speaker are also included.

The unrevised Journals are prepared based on the Clerk's scroll¹¹ and published after each sitting in both languages. Any error or omission related to the attendance of senators is noted in a corrigendum included in a subsequent issue of the unrevised Journals at the earliest opportunity. The unrevised Journals are generally posted on the Internet (at www.sencanada.ca) in the hours following the adjournment of each sitting.

The Progress of Legislation, a document showing the status of bills and the date each stage was completed in the Senate, is also updated in electronic format after each sitting. It is published in the Journals and the Debates of the last sitting day of each week.

At the end of each session, the Journals are revised, edited and published in bound volumes.¹² Proclamations relating to the appointment of a Governor General and to the opening, prorogation and dissolution of Parliament, as well as full indices and various lists of senators, committees and officers of the Senate are included in the bound volumes.

DEBATES OF THE SENATE

The Debates of the Senate are substantially a verbatim transcript of the proceedings of the Senate published after each sitting. They are prepared from the edited text of the transcripts of proceedings, often called the “blues.” The transcripts may be edited to reduce repetition or to increase clarity.¹³ Senators may correct errors or make minor alterations to the blues before these are published as the Debates, but they must obtain the agreement of the Senate to make substantial corrections to the Debates. If this permission is given, the correction is published in a subsequent issue of the unrevised Debates. The Debates are published in separate English and French documents that are available on the parliamentary website the morning after a sitting.

The first issue of the Debates every month includes an appendix listing the current officers of the Senate, members of the cabinet and various lists of senators.¹⁴

At the end of each parliamentary session, the Debates are further revised and full indices are added to produce the bound volumes of the Debates.
